

NEW YORK PAYS HOMAGE TO FIVE AIRMEN

Byrd, Chamberlin, Noville,
Acosta and Balchen Are Royally Welcomed

EXTENSIVE PROGRAM

Leviathan, On Which Flyers
Returned, Docked This Morning

NEW YORK, July 18, (INS.)—New York, as representative of the whole American nation, paid homage today with the customary pandemonium to five home-coming airmen who had braved successfully the perils of a trans-Atlantic flight.

Commander R. E. Byrd, Clarence Chamberlain, Lieut. G. O. Noville, Bert Acosta and Bernt Balchen came back to the United States on board the Leviathan to receive a welcome home demonstration second only to that given Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh. In some respects the welcome equalled that of Lindbergh's.

And New York, as usual, was ready to pay tribute with noise, confetti, processions, speeches and allied ovations. It was estimated that a million, or so, hero-worshipping residents of this city and visitors from other cities were on hand.

Secretary of the Navy Wilbur came from Washington to help greet the flyers for Byrd is a navy officer.

Col. Lindbergh was on hand too. He was invited to go down the bay along with Secretary Wilbur, Grover Whalen and the members of the Mayor's welcoming committee to give the home-coming the hand of greeting.

The fortress on Governor's Island, headquarters of the department of the East, U. S. A., was under orders to fire a salute of nine guns for Byrd, as he has an official status.

The city steamer Maccormac, bearing the officials representing the nation and the city, was to leave at 9 o'clock taking Byrd and his companions on board about 11:30. The next event on the program was a Marine procession up the harbor to pier A, made up of all sorts of harbor craft with their sirens going full blast.

Two Outstanding Reasons For Swimming

"There are two outstanding reasons why everyone should learn to swim," said Dr. Theodore B. Appel, head of State Department of Health, today. "In the first place, swimming is one of the best health-giving recreations. No activity, with the possible exception of horseback riding, brings into play so many muscles as does this sport.

"The second consideration is the safety factor. In reviewing the accidental deaths caused by drowning it is a significant fact that many people have succumbed for the lack of being able to propel themselves in deep water for only a few yards. It is not too much to say that hundreds of lives could be saved if more people would achieve the ability to paddle along in deep water for a minimum of one hundred yards.

"In these days of swimming pools, no one has any excuse not to conquer the art. Indeed, the majority of our young people are more or less at home in the water. But why are not the middle-aged also?

"Caution, however, must be exercised when indulging in this sport. Artificial pools are both good and bad from the standpoint of health. See to it that you and your children use only those pools where the water has been properly purified.

"Here are a few rules to be observed when swimming:

1. Don't swallow water. You may be swallowing typhoid fever germs. While bathers cannot avoid getting water into the mouth, they can, and should, spit it out.
  2. Don't swim in polluted water. Swimming within a few miles down stream from sewage outlets is dangerous.
  3. Don't contaminate in any way the water in which you swim.
  4. Do not eat just before swimming.
  5. Do not go in the water when overheated.
  6. Do not stay in after becoming chilled.
  7. Get out of the water while still feeling fresh.
  8. Learn to float.
  9. Learn how to resuscitate the drowned.
  10. No matter how good a swimmer you are, surround yourself with safeguards when in deep water away from shore—a boat or a companion is a mighty handy thing to have around if cramps or exhaustion overtake you. Incidentally, the mortality rate of "expert swimmers" is high every season. Conceit and deep water is a dangerous combination.
  11. And, finally, protect yourself from any chance of contracting typhoid fever by having your physician administer typhoid antitoxin.
- "Heed the above rules. They may save your life sometime."

Francis J. Byers Reports Several Sales

Real estate broker, Francis J. Byers, reports the sale of the dwelling situated No. 234 Cedar Street, Bristol, for the Estate of John T. Thorne, deceased, to Robert P. Brudon.

Also the sale of the dwelling No. 1014 Elm Street, Bristol, for Vito Caro to Pasquale Campanaro.

Mr. Byers has also sold two lots on the Delaware River Tract above Green Lane, to Grace S. Williams and the two adjoining lots on the said tract to C. Russell Ellis. There have also been conveyed on the said tract two lots to Serrill Douglass and two lots to Edward P. Turner and Phoebe M. Turner. Each of the said conveyances has a frontage on Radcliffe Street of seventy-five feet and a depth of over 250 feet to the Delaware River and each of the purchasers will erect residences thereon. The erection of these dwellings, together with several other conveyances about to be made, will add materially to this development and assure its being a fine residential location. Much grading has already been done there and shrubbery and flowers planted which materially add to the beauty of the section.

NEW STEEL BRIDGE NOW SPANS UPPER DELAWARE

Structure Officially Opened
From Stockton to Centre
Bridge

PARADE ACROSS SPAN

CENTRE BRIDGE, Pa., July 18.—Although less than a thousand feet apart two communities have been separated for several years because of the fact that the bridge connecting the two places had burned down, were again united at noon Saturday officially when the new $280,000 bridge across the Delaware River between this Bucks county hamlet and the borough of Stockton, N. J., was dedicated and opened to all travel.

A parade of automobiles led by several representatives of the Pennsylvania-New Jersey bridge commission who erected the new structure, featured the opening. Speech-making was done away with other than formal greetings from the chief engineer who erected the bridge and the welcome of the residents of Stockton, N. J., extended to their Bucks county neighbors.

The new structure, of steel and reinforced concrete, is close to 900 feet long and replaces a wooden bridge that was burned when struck by lightning on July 22, 1923. Both States, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, divided the expense in building the new bridge that completes the link of a new and short highway system from Bucks county points and the Old York Road section of suburban Philadelphia to New York City.

The old bridge over the Delaware at this point was completed in 1814. In the winter of 1816-17 a stone toll house was built at the approach of the bridge. The new structure is free of toll.

On January 8, 1841, in the greatest freshet up until that time known along the Delaware, two piers, three spans and the toll house, all on the New Jersey side of the river, were washed away. George Fell, of Centre Bridge, was carried down with the wreckage, upon which he passed safely under the bridge across the Delaware at Lambertville, four miles below here. An old record says that the water was so nearly up to the bridge that Fell's clothing was torn and the skin scraped from his back, although he lay flat upon some floating timbers. He was at last rescued by a man in a boat, and landed near the spot where Washington and his Continental troops crossed the Delaware at Washington Crossing, Pa.

Though telegraph and telephone were unknown at that time, it appears to have been known on both sides of the river that Fell had gone down with the bridge. A man living in Stockton at the time told Elmer Robertson, Stockton historian some years ago that when later in the day Fell had been brought back to his home in Centre Bridge, people in Stockton heard the cheering above the roar of the flood and knew that he had been rescued.

In June, 1862, another high freshet occurred in the Delaware, caused by the breaking of several dams on the Lehigh river. This freshet was remarkable for the very large number of logs that passed down the river. Some of the logs were sawed into building lumber and there are houses remaining in Stockton today in good condition, built out of the timber that floated down the river in the 1862 freshet.

Another freshet occurred on October 10, 1903, that surpassed all others, the water reaching the Stockton Hotel, several blocks away from the river. Centre Bridge was the only bridge left standing in serviceable condition between Trenton and Easton.

On the early morning of May 11, 1923, John Perry and Louis Di Sodi, while attempting to cross the bridge with a heavily loaded truck, broke through the flooring of the second span from the New Jersey side. Perry escaped by jumping, but Di Sodi fell with the truck into seven feet of water 30 feet below. He was rescued by members of the Stockton Fire De-

AUSTRIAN GOVERNMENT PLANS TO HALT RIOTING

About 10,000 National Troops
Are Stationed In Suburbs

SOME DISTURBANCE YET

BERLIN, July 18, (I.N.S.)—There was a sporadic outbreak of street rioting in Vienna last night in which four persons were killed, according to a dispatch from Prague today.

VIENNA, (Via BRATISLAVA) July 18, (I.N.S.)—With more than 70 dead and 300 wounded, the Austrian government took vigorous measures today to prevent a recurrence of the rioting which, for a time, threatened to grow into a national revolution.

About 10,000 national troops are stationed in the suburbs and in some districts the police have begun to disarm the recalcitrants.

The city is quiet. Street cars and motor buses are running. Government officials claim that all danger of civil war is past.

Official denial is made of reports that foreign diplomats asked for intervention by foreign troops. It is admitted that intervention by any of Austria's neighbors might lead to grave international complications in central Europe, for the uprising here has grown into more than a domestic problem.

Chancellor Seipel issued a communique promising to call Parliament into special session, but demanding that the socialists allow freedom of debate without pressure.

Furthermore the Chancellor has promised tentative reorganization of the government in due course of time "so long as it is not carried out under pressure."

But Chancellor Seipel and Burgomaster Seitz issued appeals to the public to help maintain law and order, promising an adjustment of the troubles.

The origin of the outbreak remains somewhat obscure. It is reported however that it was precipitated by a few hundred communists who began shooting during a demonstration by socialists in front of the Palace of Justice. A share of the blame is placed upon the social democrats, also.

Planes are flying at half mast in the workers' quarters and many houses are draped with mourning for the dead.

Funerals for the victims will be held on Wednesday when more trouble may break out. However, strong military and police precautions will be taken to preserve order on that day.

It appears certain that members of the German party will attempt to utilize the present plight of Austria to bring about a junction of this country with Germany. The powers, acting through the League of Nations, would be certain to oppose such a move.

The dead are not all workers. Five of them are policemen; three are women and many are youths.

During the past 24 hours there have been attempts by worker members of the social democratic party to gather into mobs but they were quickly dispersed by the police.

United States Minister Washburn takes a more optimistic view of the situation. He said he did not believe that foreigners in Vienna were in any danger.

Austria is in a peculiar position. The little country is "top heavy." Out of a population of only 7,000,000 about 1,850,000 live in Vienna and produce no food stuffs.

The management of the Riverside Theatre will introduce an innovation tonight for the first time in Bristol, which should prove interesting besides entertaining.

In addition to the talking pictures, Vicente Blasco Ibane's famous story, "The Temptress" will be shown on the screen with a number of famous actors and actresses in the cast.

One of the most colorful spectacles ever introduced into a screen production was filmed in "The Temptress" in a sensational ballet number directed by Theodore Kosloff, famous dance creator. Special lighting effects and glittering costumes mark this spectacle, laid in a Parisian revel in the new romance of Paris and the Argentine.

Greta Garbo and Antonio Moreno, Lionel Barrymore, Marc McDermott, Roy D'Arcy, Virginia Brown Faire and other notables are included in the cast.

Cover Garbage Pails

CHAS. P. YEAMANS DIES OF STROKE AT OCEAN GROVE

Deceased Was Bristol's Oldest
Native Male
Resident

WEDDED OVER 63 YEARS

Was One of Pioneer Boatmen
In This Section of The State

Death yesterday afternoon, at Ocean Grove, N. J., claimed Bristol's oldest native male resident. Charles P. Yeamans died at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, having suffered a stroke at 6 o'clock yesterday morning in his cottage where he had been since June 9th with his family.

Mr. Yeamans, familiarly known by third ward residents and those who lived in the borough for a number of years as "Uncle Charlie," had not been in the best of health recently, but after spending two weeks at Ocean Grove appeared to improve until yesterday morning, when he suffered a stroke. His daughter, Mrs. Samuel Mauer, and his wife were close at hand and administered to him until a physician arrived. The body was brought to Bristol this morning.

Funeral services will be held on Wednesday afternoon, at 2 o'clock, from his late residence, 307 Otter street, and burial will be made in the Bristol Cemetery. Friends may call Tuesday evening. It is requested that flowers be omitted.

Mr. Yeamans was a native of Bristol, having been born here December 15, 1841. He was born on Otter street within a stone's throw of where he lived since 1879.

The deceased was the son of Sarah and Michael Yeamans, and during his earlier days followed the water, being engaged as a canal boatman, then later following the sea and finally operating freight boats between New York, Philadelphia and Bristol. He was engaged in the retail coal business here for 32 years, but retired about five years ago and since that time has devoted himself to his garden and work about his home.

Mr. Yeamans was a member of the Knights of Pythias, and Hopkins Lodge, No. 87, I. O. O. F., for many years, and continued his membership up to the time of his death. He is survived by his wife to whom he had been married 63 years on May 19th; and one daughter, Mrs. Samuel Mauer.

The deceased was of a jovial disposition and always had a joke for those with whom he was acquainted. The children of the neighborhood knew him well and always called him "Uncle Charlie." Children living near his cottage at Ocean Grove were also well acquainted with the deceased and would relate to him their stories of their fishing expeditions.

CRIMINALITY AND MOBS

The mood of the mob is as easy to understand as any other animal trait man shares with the savage beasts. It is a blend of sorrow for the victim and abhorrence for the criminal.

Lynching is always more justification for a crime than punishment for it. Mob law shows that the criminal it destroys is not the only member of the community capable of taking human life without due process of law. When large groups of men and women will murder and torture, and whole communities will condone their deeds, it is not surprising that individuals will slay and steal.

There is a great deal of truth in the statement that lynching parties are composed of potential criminals, that those who are capable of taking the law into their own hands are capable of the crime that has provoked them to their mad frenzy. And the sooner society regards the lyncher as a criminal the sooner it will abolish lynchings.

It is only natural that human beings should be inflamed by the sight or thought of a little girl assaulted by a fiend or of a woman slain by a criminal. But civilized man no longer uses mob law to prove how sensitive he is. Old women are no longer burned as witches, and when murderers are executed society does not demand that their hearts be torn from the body and the corpse cut in four pieces and publicly exposed. Only a few years ago the public thought less of the sentence to be "hanged, drawn and quartered" than it now thinks of the sentence of death in the electric chair.

JINGO ROMANCING

That every nation is making and storing deadly gases is one of those secrets so thoroughly hushed up that everybody knows about them. Russia is the latest to join the ranks of the reputed poison gas makers. And, to make the tale run true to form, she is credited with having discovered at least two gases of incredible deadliness.

Try as they may, military men and chemists make no headway in dispelling these myths. Twenty-five gases were used in the war, ranging from lethal chlorine and phosgene to vapors which reduced regiments to involuntary weeping and sneezing. But all were known to the chemists long before 1914.

The truth is that since the World War more progress has been made in protecting soldiers from poison gases than in adding new and more terrible gases to those used in the war.

Tales of gases which can put a whole army to sleep and of liquids so horribly potent that two drops will blot out thousands of men do more credit to the imagination than to the individuals, more zealous than practical, who are seeking to stop manufacture of poison gases for industrial as well as military uses.

The astute will dismiss, as sheer romancing, stories of cities to be reduced to tombs by gas bombs dropped from the skies. High explosives are far more destructive; yet even they were futile when used by the Germans against Paris and London.

There are persons who do not worry about having empty heads if they have full pocketbooks.

Man is a resourceful creature—he can always find plenty of excuses when he has no reasons.

As I see it—

Observations About Events,
Persons and Things Which Are of General Interest. : : :

There are at the present time between 20 and 30 men and women from Bristol and vicinity in foreign countries, each having left the confines of the United States for some specific reason.

Several have gone for but a brief period, with the desire to spend their vacation in enlarging their knowledge of the people of other worlds, enjoying the scenic grandeur of certain portions of the earth's surface, and consequently return to their duties more "pepped up."

Others have been engaged in missionary work, or business enterprises for their government.

And still other individuals, having been born in European or Asiatic countries, and lived in their native land during the earlier years of their lives, have had the desire to see friends of their childhood, and satisfy their inward thoughts as to just what the "old country" looks like now.

There are three factors to be considered in the good derived through these short or prolonged visits, not only of Bristolians, but of citizens of the United States throughout the union.

The first is the individual himself.

The traveler, if on a vacation, will undoubtedly benefit physically; and if he is abroad for either a few weeks or a few years he will broaden his mind, to the end that he will be fairer-minded and more tolerant toward "foreigners"; and his knowledge of foreign affairs, and conditions politically and socially, will be enlarged.

The second thing to take into consideration, is religion. Religion will without a doubt be raised to a higher plane because of the better feeling of brotherhood between men and nations.

Then with the enlargement of the knowledge of foreign countries and affairs by these travelers, and the raising of religion to a higher plane, our country and the countries to which these many "ambassadors" go, will feel a stronger bond of friendship linking them together.

Ultimately nations, themselves, will become more tolerant of each other, will consider the other country's views for a greater length of time, and look upon each as kin.

"No," Mary shook her head. "I haven't told you all. They came to take Bobby away." She turned her head away from Wally's gaze. There was only the soft profile now with the curve of hair on her cheek.

"Who came to take him where?" "I don't know who she was—she was sent by the authorities—to take Bobby to an orphan asylum. She thought," her voice came lower; "she thought I wasn't a fit companion for him—the sister of a murderer—and that he was young enough to forget all if given into the proper hands. She took him to the proper hands."

Wally made a little noise, not quite a laugh, not quite an ejaculation, a cross between the two. His eyes narrowed, and he ran his hand through his hair. "The majesty of our law!" He came to Mary and turned her face about, her chin in his hand.

"You crying? They'll never get away with that stuff, not if I have to kill the editor to give me space to call them what they deserve."

"Goodbye, Elaine, dear."

I'll get the attention of the country focused right here in little old Garden City. I'll get them somehow!"

"No, Wally. You're not going to do that. I've thought it all out. It doesn't hurt any more, and perhaps that part of it is for the best." She would try to explain. "You see—it would be difficult to support myself and Bobby right now."

"You don't think I'd let you, do you?" Wally interrupted, grimly. Her gaze was a concoction of everything blessed. "Some day, Wally, I'll tell you what I really think of you."

"Tell me now," his eyes pleaded. She hurried on. "I've thought it all out—what was I saying?—it would be rather hard for me," she put the palm of her hand against his mouth to stifle another outburst, "and until I get settled, I'd prefer, I really would prefer it, I think!—happily—to have Bobby somewhere where I know he will be well taken care of—and safe. He won't be happy there, Young Robert," her eyes misted, "but it's just as New York. What I am earning enough for both, which will be soon, Wally, soon, I'll come and get him. And let them try to tell me I'm a detrimental influence then!" she finished.

Mary—a detrimental influence, when she was driving him on to the best that was in him, a best he didn't realize himself capable of feeling—

"What are your plans, sweet?" "New York."

He stared at her. "What?" "New York, Wally. Can't you hear me? New York!"

"Like blazes!" he flared. "Don't swear, Wallace," primly, with a laugh in her eyes.

Wally, truthfully. "Like blazes, I said. I'll say it again. What do you mean—New York? What's the brilliant overpowering idea? What's doing there that isn't doing here?"

"Bobbie's doing there, Wally."

"And—?" "That's all." She rose, struck her palms together and asked, with a little weary gesture, "Isn't that enough?"

"Not quite," Wally was grim. "How do you think it will help to be near him?"

"I'll see him more often."

"I doubt that."

"You mean—they won't let me to him? Surely—"

"I doubt that they will consider you the best influence for him." His voice was gentle. "They'll try to acclimate him—and your coming won't help—you see?"

"Well—that remains to be seen. Nevertheless he will feel I am there."

She shook her head impatiently. "Nothing can keep me. I'm going."

Wally groaned. "Oh Lord." Then, "Look here. Marry me!" He came to her in two strides, and grasped her wrist with one hand, while with the other he forced her to look up. "You're going to marry me, Mary, grimly. He shook her chin to disturb the calm of her gaze. "Do you hear?"

"No." He said, "I promised I wouldn't again—but I shall. You shouldn't look that way," and grasped her little young body in his arms, and bent his shining head—When he lifted it again he was breathing with an effort. There was something in his chest that obstructed the passage of air from his lungs. He overcame that as it lifting himself bodily and leaping the obstacle.

Mary looked at him, and answered the question she saw pleading from his eyes.

"No," she said.

That maddened him. "Do you know what love is—are you capable of feeling it, you frigid little—little—!" His hand grasped her wrist again, and he was hurting her. She had never seen Wally so white, and the customary gay light was gone from his eyes.

"I've no time for it," she countered weakly, afraid, somehow. "No time for love?" He threw back his head at that, and laughed. "Oh Elaine, Elaine sweet! When it comes it won't be because you've found time for it! Why am I heaving about which you are as innocent as the proverbial lamb? Well—that's that." Wally had reverted again. "Let's get back to New York. When are you going?"

"Tomorrow!" He was taken aback. "Not so soon?"

"Yes. I can't wait to begin." He thought of the troublesome paths in store for her, which he, out of the fund of his superior knowledge, could intuitively feel.

"Are you going to write me?" "Of course, Wally."

"Will you keep me informed of everything, including your need of help?"

"That need will never rise!" Cockily. The old Mary with head afloat. He groaned. Would she never learn? And yet, he adored it, the bright scarlet feather of youth!

"I'm coming to see you off."

"No, please, Wally dear. I'd rather you didn't."

There was such a thing, thought Wally, as carrying a thing a bit too far.

"Why in blazes not?" "Oh—I don't know—" What she meant was that she wanted to start fresh, to make her leap with no trailing condoleances of farewell that might hamper her progress.

"Nevertheless," said Wally, "I'm coming." And he did. And there were no tears, albeit Mrs. Tomlinson did wipe her eyes when she thought Mary wasn't aware of the furtive gesture. There were flowers from Wally, orchids, no less, a gay little corsage. And a cake from Mrs. Tomlinson.

"Good-bye, Elaine, dear." His head bowed, it hurt saying good-bye to Wally. There came a funny little tug at her breast.

"Good-bye, Wally, dear."

"You will write," anxiously, "and let me know everything?"

"I will, dear."

"Good-bye, Mrs. Tomlinson." "Good-bye, Mary, darling. Be a good girl and remember your mother, and remember the wickedness of the city," at which Mary smiled.

"Good-bye—good-bye." Wally and Mrs. Tomlinson standing close together in the blazing noon-day sun, and growing more and more blurred with each inch that Mary drew away from them, and the very last memory of Garden City was Mrs. Tomlinson, waving her bag frantically and mouthing something that vaguely looked like "Patch!" which was silly, of course. Patch was to board at Mrs. Tomlinson's. But what could it have been that she had been trying to tell Mary? And whatever it was—that did it matter now?

What did anything matter but the new life that was waiting for her, pulsating with every deep throbs of the train, lying quiver in the sun that Mary might come to gather the loveliness of its blossoms?

AN ATTRACTIVE KITCHEN INSPIRES THE COOK!

(Editor's Note: This is one of an unusual series of cooking articles by 6 famous cooks, running exclusively in this paper.)

What fascinating places some kitchens are! Bright and attractive, they literally inspire their owners to better cooking deeds.

Every housewife owes herself a well-lighted, cheery kitchen. For she spends more time in the kitchen than any other place.

Gray Kitchens
Gray kitchens are very popular these days. In fact, they are more in favor than white ones. That's because they are almost as light as white kitchens, and so very much easier to keep clean. White shows every fingermark.

One of the most attractive kitchens has gray walls, woodwork, kitchen cabinet, cupboard and shelves. All are painted a glossy gray which can be quickly washed with a damp cloth. Fresh white curtains bordered in pink are at the wide windows. And a neat linoleum, black and gray squared, covers the floor.

A Rest Corner
Stove, table, high work stool and cabinet are grouped for easy work—to save steps. And in one part of the kitchen is the housewife's rest corner—a rocking chair and table with reading matter. Many a "rest minute" can be snatched while meals are cooking.

Truly, such a kitchen is a happy place in which to work. And, isn't it true that the housewife's happiness is reflected in better meals?

In such a kitchen as the one just described, the work is so much easier that the housewife is often inspired to make new dishes—a change from the regular round of meat and potatoes.

Miss Rosa Michaelis, New Orleans cooking expert, today gives several delightful recipes of the "inspirational" type.

Vanilla Water Pudding

- 1 cup sugar
- 2 eggs
- 1 cup milk
- 3 tablespoons flour
- 3 tablespoons butter
- 2 bananas
- 1 teaspoon vanilla extract
- vanilla wafers

Make a custard of all the ingredients but the wafers in a double boiler. Line bottom of baking dish with wafers. Add a layer of sliced bananas. Pour half the custard over them. Add bananas, and rest of custard. Beat egg whites stiff and place on top. Put in oven and brown.

You will find many advantages in the latest development in oil stove cabinets. One of the best has the ends cut away to allow the oven to rest on a single burner when desired. It also has a perforated top shelf. Warm air from the stove comes up through the holes and keeps warm any food which is placed there.

Cocanut Dainties

These are nice to serve at parties.

- 3 whites of eggs
- 1/4 cup corn syrup
- 1/4 cup flour
- 1/2 teaspoon baking powder
- 1/4 teaspoon salt
- 2 cups dry cocconut
- 1 teaspoon vanilla

Beat the whites stiff, gradually add the corn syrup, then fold in the sifted flour, cocconut, salt and vanilla. Drop by tablespoons on greased baking sheet and bake in moderate oven twenty minutes.

Skyline Walnut Wafers

You can make these at the same time as the cocconut dainties, for they require the same baking time. Mrs. Belle DeGraf, famous San Francisco cooking authority, gives the following recipe:

- 1 cup brown sugar
- 1 cup broken walnut meats
- 1/4 teaspoon salt
- 2 tablespoons flour
- 1 egg, beaten

Mix ingredients in order given. Drop from teaspoon on greased cookie sheet several inches apart to allow for spreading. Bake in a very moderate oven and remove from sheet at once.

Sweet Potato Pone

This is a favorite Southern dish. Here's Miss Michaelis' recipe.

- 4 large sweet potatoes
- 1 cup brown sugar
- 4 eggs
- grated rind of lemon
- 1 cup milk
- 1/2 cup butter
- 1/2 teaspoon each of nutmeg, ground cloves and cinnamon
- 1/4 cup molasses

Wash and grate the potatoes. Beat the eggs well; stir the butter and sugar till creamy; add the eggs, then grated potatoes and spices, also milk. Beat all well together, add lemon rind. Put into a well buttered pan and bake slowly for an hour.

May be served either warm or cold. Usually cut in slices.

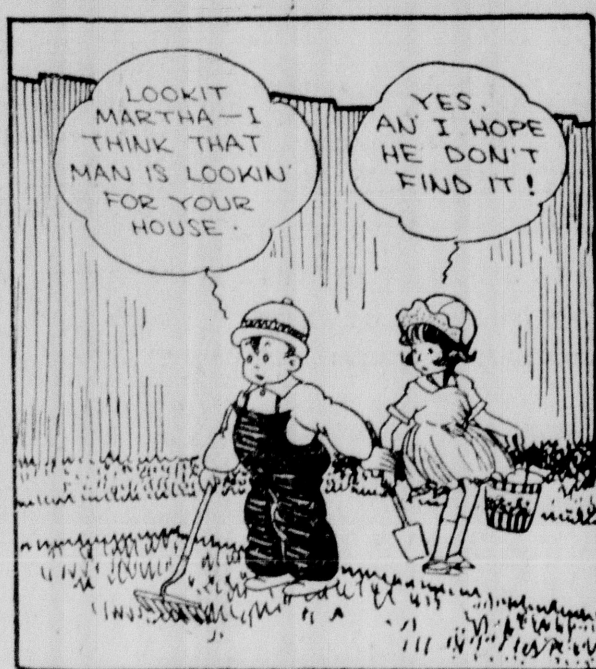

Delicious dishes! How one enjoys cooking them in a cheerful kitchen! Brighten your kitchen! You'll be a happier woman and the whole family will benefit.

Porcelain enamel is greatly in demand for kitchen equipment because it is so easily cleaned. The latest turn this development has taken is in stove tops. Now for the first time you can buy a modern stove with a smooth, porcelain enamel top.

New Steel Bridge Now Spans Upper Delaware

On Sunday, May 26, 1923, a resident of Centre Bridge returning home from a church service in Stockton, found old Centre Bridge on fire on the second span from the Pennsylvania side. A bucket brigade was organized and the flames were extinguished.

Thursday evening, July 19, 1923, an old unused fish cabin located on the river bank close to the New Jersey end broke out in flames and threatened to destroy the bridge, but firemen saved it. The following Sunday evening, July 22, during a heavy thunder shower the old bridge was struck by lightning. Twenty-five volunteer firemen dropped through the floor of the burning bridge to the river below. All escaped drowning, but some were injured.

The fire that destroyed the bridge was the scene of a famous painting of Edward W. Redfield, America's foremost landscape artist, who resides in the artist colony near here. A movement started by the residents of Centre Bridge and Stockton immediately after the fire culminated today in the formal dedication of a fire-proof span free of tolls.

"The plot thickens," said the lady as she sowed grass seed for the third time.

DAILY NEWS LETTER

I. N. S. Staff Correspondent
ROCHESTER, N. Y.—In spite of the fact that the marriage license clerk in the City Hall reports a fall in the number of June brides, the public library branches throughout the city show an increase that will gladden many a hubby's heart, or where they say a husband's heart is his stomach.

The number of self-conscious young women who ask shyly for the location of the culinary department is increasing by leaps and bounds, if William F. Yust, librarian, is to be believed.

Attendants, although they have no means of gauging the results of the onslaught, believe that the results in general augur well for the newly wedded husband.

WILD MAN AMONG THE WOMEN

Is Jack Sharkey keeping his mind on the fight? Don't bet until we can find out more about it. Picture shows the heavy-weight boxer at a New York theatre during his training period. With him are, left to right, Eloise Streen, Mildred Wall, members of the cast, and Mrs. Sharkey.

Dingy fingers and nails in deep mourning will be taboo on city playgrounds from now on. The effects of a merry bean bag game or an inning or two of indoor baseball will not tarry long on the dainty hands of members of playground girls clubs, for nail files will play an important part in the program on all the municipal recreation grounds.

This is the reason why. Personal hygiene, in all its latest wrinkles, has been added to the curriculum of the playground classes. In addition to the general art of manicuring the care of the hair will be taught aspiring beauty contest entrants.

All the incantations, prayers, and supplications of the Indian, offered up with all the mysterious rites known to the medicine man, were insufficient to save the biggest meeting of the Six Nations since Sullivan laid waste the fertile valley of the Genesee with his expedition in 1777, were unable to appease the Rall God, who deluged the Letchworth Park meeting with his floods.

Historical background for the meeting was furnished by a council meeting of thirty-six sachems of the tribes in full regalia. A dance, "Death to the Corn Borer," in celebration of the state's successful campaign against the pest, was danced by braves for the first time. Among the delegates was Nancy Squirrel, 119 years old, whose puffing pipe was in evidence wherever the slightest bit of excitement drew the crowd.

Offering his record as unbeaten for the championship of the sheep shearers of the United States, Fred West, seventy years old, is still in the business, having relieved 680 blating animals of their warm coats so far this year. Mr. West, who is a native of Yorkshire, England, estimates that in the fifty years he has been in DANVILLE, PA., July 18, (I.N.S.)—Inspiration for the sermons grows best in a garden of roses, according to Rev. R. D. Adams, pastor of the Grove Presbyterian Church here.

Rev. Adams is the proud owner of one of the best known rose gardens in this section of the state, in the rear of his parsonage here, and he spends a large portion of his time cultivating the flowers.

Rev. Adams has his flowers arranged according to a set color scheme of yellow, pink and deep red, among which are some of the best known species grown. His most famous variety is the "Daily Mail," the flower which won a $10,000 prize in London last year.
